The Presbytery Adjourns.

At yesterday afternoon's session of the Washington Presbytery a resolution was adopted that in the hope of an amicable adjustment of the matter of the Colclarier claim and the Assembly Church, which may prevent further agitation of the subject, a special committee of five be appointed to confer with the Assembly Church and other parties interested and report to the Presbytery at the adjourned meeting in June. The moderator appointed the following committee: Elders Foster, McFarland and Smith, and Revs. Chester and Ramsstell.

Darnestown, Md., was chosen as the place for the next meeting of the Presbytery.

It was decided to hold memorial services on the morning of April 30 in the First church. Reports were presented at the evening session, and the Presbytery adjourned. adjustment of the matter of the Colclaries journed.

The Presbytery has elected the following commissioners to the general assembly; Rev. George O. Little and Rev. Dr. T. S. Ham-lin, principals, and Rev. James M. Nourse alternate for Rev. G. O. Little, and Rev. J. N. Mellvaine an alternate for Dr. Hamlin. The following elders were chosen as commissioners to the general assembly; Hon. John W. Foster and Charles B. Church; alternates, Irvin B. Linton and Dr. J. E. Deets.

Determined to Fight.

A Washington man named Witmore and an Alexandrian named Sharkey tried to have a prize light near Falls Church, Va., yesterday, but it was interrupted by the county officers at the conclus seventeenth round, and, although both men were badly punished, a new lighting ground was hunted up and the men resumed their battle in a ring pitched near Hunting Creek, two miles south of Mount Vernon. In the thirtieth round Witmore knocked out his antagonist. Witmore was seconded by Ben Richards and Jeff. Phillips looked after Sharkey. George Northridge acted as referee.

REAL PATHOS ON THE STAGE.

Marie Prescott Plays "Parthenia" With an Aching Heart and Gives Way A startling incident occurred at the arch Street Theatre during Marie Prescott's performance of "Ingomar" the other night in Philadelphia, which illustrates in a forcible manner the pathetic side of stage life.

While Miss Prescott was in her dressingroom preparing for the next act a bluecoated messenger boy tapped at the door and a moment later handed in a telegram.
It was only a line, but it caused the actress to grow pale and almost fall to the floor. It was from her home, and simply announced the death of her son, a young man of 16, who had been the idol of her heart.

the call boy came to announce the act. By a powerful effort she roused herself, and, with a heroism that would have done credit to a Spattan mother, went on the stage to continue the entertainment for the benefit continue the entertainment for the benefit of the waiting audience.

The most dramatic part of the event, however, was yet to come. Just as the netress, in her part of Parthenin, says to Ingonor: "I will never see thee more," she fell senseless and prostrate at his feet. It was some moments before the audience realized the situation. Some thought it was in the play, but they were soon undeceived.

ceived.

Several sympathetic spectators, grasping the state of things, cried out, "Lower the curtain!" This was done, and restoratives were applied to the actress.

In less than ten minutes the play was resumed, the star sustaining her difficult part—rendered still more difficult under the circumstances—with heroism that called forth unstinted praise. After the performance she was removed to her hotel in her coupe.

called forth unstinted praise. After the performance she was removed to her hotel in her coupe.

The whole affair had about it a dramatic flavor that made it of intense interest, and evoked the hearty sympathy of the large audience. The majority of the spectators were under the impression that Miss Prescott was ill and left the house without learning the real cause of the agitation on the stage.

Nervous prostration was feared, but her manager, John Whitely, stated at a late hour that she was resting as comfortably as could be expected.

Dangers of Defective Plumbing Last night it was the aim of Profess Fava, in lecturing about the plumbing of to impart to his very large audience some notions about how to dispose of the pipes and traps and to understand the me of these appliances. He showed that not only ignorant plumbers are apt to fall in making faulty connections, leaving out one trap and so destroying all the good effect of the other ones, but that also the public sometimes is itself at fault, as is the ease with the so-called "unsealed traps." He quoted numerous examples from practice and reports of the best medical authorities, showing that defective plumbing had caused grave diseases, and that the removal of the nuisance had been followed by almost miraculous recovery. He collected all the defects he could expose on one plate which he explained in detail, and will explain next time the counterpart—the principles of a well-built house. Great applianse greeted the popular lecturer, and showed that he had uttered words whose truth was recognized. of these appliances. He showed that not
